If you are a federal employee you will likely be confronted with a massive

Reduction in Force (RIF) as the Trump administration slashes the federal agency workforce. Do you understand how a RIF is conducted, what the preference categories are and what laws, regulations, and rules OPM requires agencies to follow? Do you understand the terms: competitive area, competitive level, service credit, bump, and retreat? Do you know your appeal and collective bargaining unit grievance rights? If not, then this quick reference guide was made for you. Easy to follow - it should be required reading for all federal workers.

Discusses Federal employees' perceptions of workplace changes, following budget cuts associated with downsizing.

Summarizes the responses of 9,710 employees within the framework of a survey conducted in the Spring of 1996. Federal Employees Almanac 1997 DIANE Publishing Increasing numbers of Fed. employees (FE) will become eligible to retire over the next few years. Questions have been raised about whether the gov't. will be prepared to meet any problems that could arise as a result of retirements. This report determines how many FE are likely to retire in the near future. It estimates the no. of FE who would be eligible to retire and the no. who would actually retire collectively and by agency for the 24 Fed. agencies that fall under the CFO Act for FY 1999-2006, and compared those estimates with the no. of FE who were eligible and actually retired during FY 1991-1998. Assesses actual and estimate eligibility and retirement for the same periods for selected critical occupations.
